"We revised our business risk profile assessment on Teva to 'satisfactory' from 'strong,' based on the increased challenges Teva's branded specialty business faces given the looming patent expiration and expected generic competition to the company's lead product, the multiple sclerosis treatment Copaxone," said Standard & Poor's credit analyst Arthur Wong.

Supporters of parallel trade in medicines say that it helps stimulate competition and keep drug prices low across Europe while critics believe it disrupts supplies and prevents patients getting access to drugs at prices they can afford.
