Osteonecrosis is rarely described in bones other than the jaws. The etiology centers on poor local vascularity and impaired wound healing, especially in the posterior mandible and in the lingual posterior mandible where the bone is thick, more lamellar and less vascular. Olson et al suggest that it is most common in the mandible because of the nature of the blood vessels and the anatomy of the bone. They state that blood flow in the end arteries of the posterior mandible is weak and the bone is thick
